

Appendix 5. Peterhouse College Tour transcript

OK. So, we're going to imagine that we're walking down Trumpington Rd, OK and we are reaching Peterhouse College on the left-hand side now. Peterhouse is the oldest College in the University of Cambridge. It was founded in 1284. If you look at it now, it doesn't look that old. Well, it is quite old. The buildings that you see in front of you are from the 18th century, but the original mediaeval college was destroyed by fire, many years ago. There is one part of the college, I think, where you can still see the mediaeval building, and that's near the kitchen, but of course we aren't allowed in the college, so we can't go inside to have a look around. But you can see the beautiful 18th century buildings from the outside. We're going to walk a little bit further now and we're going to look at over the road this shop, this shop called Fitzbillies and we've just seen Fitzwilliam Museum and Fitzbilies is named after the Fitzwilliam, so Billy > William is a shortening of the name. So inside you will see a huge variety of cakes and pastries but the most famous is the Chelsea bun. Now these are a bit of an acquired taste, so I quite like them, but I would defy anyone to eat more than one of them. They are so sickly sweet. They are made out of like a bread, like a bread roll, but they're soaked in a syrup, golden syrup – sweet sugar, and more and more is heaped on these cakes. They're a bit of a speciality and some students who perhaps have been studying at Cambridge University in the past, they have these buns shipped over all over the world for them to have because I think it reminds them of the time they had at Cambridge. And nostalgia is a powerful thing. Thank you.

Appendix 7. Vilnius University Tour transcript

I am almost sure that you have seen Vilnius University on the screen—in a movie or TV series. Our oldest university is now often used as a location for historical films, as well as the whole city. 'Chernobyl', 'Stranger Things', 'The Playlist', 'Clark', 'Young Wallander', 'Blood, Sex, and Royalty', 'Catherine the Great,' and many more. They have all been filmed somewhere here. Vilnius University is the oldest and largest university in Lithuania and one of the oldest in Eastern and Central Europe. It was established during the era of the Polish-Lithuanian Commonwealth during the second half of the 16th century. In order to resist the spread of Protestantism in the region and the influence of the Reformation, the Jesuits, Catholic monks, were invited to Lithuania. Upon their arrival, they founded a college, which later, in 1579, was reorganized into a university. Through Vilnius University, the use of the Latin language, Catholicism, book printing, and Lithuanian writing spread throughout the country, along with cultural and scientific innovations. However, the most significant impact of the university on the society of the Grand Duchy of Lithuania was its involvement in the European space of science and education. It is worth mentioning that in the middle of the 18th century, the university had its own observatory. For this reason, on the wall of the central university building, you can see many tools that were used to watch the sky. I'm proud to say that in those old days, Vilnius University Observatory was the third-best observatory in the world after Greenwich and Paris observatories. One more thing: the Vilnius University library is the oldest and one of the biggest in the country. And here they preserve the first Lithuanian book, 'Katekizmas,' published in the 16th century. There are only two copies known of it in the world – one here and the other in Poland.

Walking down Trumpington Road, you reach Peterhouse College, the oldest college at the University of Cambridge, founded in 1284. While the current buildings date from the 18th century, a medieval part near the kitchen still exists, though it's not accessible to the public. Continuing along the road, you'll see Fitzbillies, a shop named after the Fitzwilliam Museum. Inside, they offer a variety of cakes, but the Chelsea bun is their specialty. These sweet, syrup-soaked buns are an acquired taste, and while they may be too sweet for some, they evoke nostalgia for former Cambridge students who even have them shipped worldwide to relive their time at the university.

Vilnius University is a prime film location for historical films. It's the oldest and largest university in Lithuania, and one of the oldest in Europe. It was founded by Jesuits during the Polish-Lithuanian Commonwealth in the second half of the 16th century. Jesuits started a college and it became a university in 1579. It was a driving force for many educational and cultural innovations, but its greatest impact was via the development of the science and education of space. In the mid-18th century its observatory was the third best, after Greenwich and Paris. It also houses the oldest and one of the biggest libraries in Lithuania in which there's one of only two copies of the first printed Lithuanian book, 'Katekizmas', the other being in Poland.

Corpus Christi College tour (original transcript 145 words)

Corpus Christi College, founded in 1352, is the sixth oldest college in Cambridge and is the only college established by townspeople rather than royalty or wealthy patrons. The college is also notable for its Old Court, which features well-preserved medieval buildings from the 1350s. This courtyard is the oldest continuously inhabited courtyard in the UK, adding to the college's historical significance. Unfortunately, the college is currently closed to visitors.
